Southern Resources.

(Wall Street Summary).

"Until we learn to think in billions we cannot adequately grasp the potentialities of the South." These are the words of Richard H. Edmonds, editor of the Manufacturers' Record, who for more than a quarter of a century has been closely identified with the resources of the southern states, and has labored persistently to make them known to the rest of the country. He contends that the term billions is scarcely broad enough to cover the undeveloped wealth of the south, and points to that its coal lands alone, excepting Russia, are four times as great as those of all European countries combined.

Kentucky is the basis of a marvelous coal industry, being particularly rich in land capable of yielding coke in every respect as good as that made in Connellsville, Pa., where prices have advanced from $600 to $8,000 an acre. Kentucky coke fields can be purchased from $20 to $75 an acre and metalurgical development, says Mr. Edmonds, must give them a value somewhat commensurate with Pennsylvania prices or the latter must decline in time to a parity with the south. Nor is this all. Birmingham can manufacture iron as cheaply as England or Germany, and with the United States Steel Corporation's ability to put tens of millions of dollars into the building of plants in this district, the iron and steel situation for the whole south is destined to undergo a wonderful expansion. The time is not far distant when the prophecies concerning the south will be fulfilled. Far seeing capitalists, perceiving what industrial development has done for Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois and the New England states, are diverting to the south the wealth that has been made elsewhere, and it is not unlikely that the close of another decade will find the south offering greater opportunities for investment in industrial and agricultural enterprises than any other section of this country.

In addition to coal and iron the south is rich in oil, gas, phosphate rock, copper, granites and marbles, and a variety of minerals the importance of which have not yet been fully realized. Its soil is fertile, its coast line, rivers and harbors afford it transportation possibilities of magnitude and its climatic advantages are unequalled. Its resources qualify it for a world's workshop, while for comfort and pleasure in living it is beneficently favored. To this region of hidden wealth, of undeveloped resources, of potential possibilities, the eyes of capital in the north, and west, and, as well in Europe, have been turned for some years. What investment and enterprise have accomplished so far is merely a scratching of the south's surface; yet at that returns have been generous. The near future should witness a quickening in southern investment.

The is the season for planting seed and 'tis also the editor's time of need. Sow radish and lettuce, too, and pay the editor whatever is due. Go build yourself an onion bed and remember the editor must be fed. Sow several rows of early peas, and pay for this year's paper, please. Dig up the earth around each strawberry vine, and if you want the Chronicle drop us a line. Plant some potatoes and put in the hash and remember the editor is short of cash. Fix up a hill or so of beans and with ye editor divide your means. Of watermelons you'll need a patch—the editor's pants needs one to match. Pay up your subscription then plant your corn and you'll be a good fellow as sure as you are born.—Stevenson. Als., Chronicle.

NOTICE.

I'LL PAINT YOU A SIGN, RUMSELER.

I will paint you a sign board, rum seller. And hang it above your door. A truer and a better signboard Than you ever had before. I will paint with the skill of a master. And many shall pause to see This wonderful piece of painting. So like the reality.

I will paint you yourself, rum seller. As you wait for that fair young boy, Just in the morn of manhood, A mother's pride and joy; He has no thought of stopping. But you greet him with a smile— You seem so gay and friendly That he pauses to chat a while.

I will paint you again, rum seller. I will paint you as you stand, Holding a glass of liquor Sparkling in either hand. He wavers but you urge him, "Drink, pledge me just this one." And he lifts the glass and drains it And the hellish work is done.

And next I will paint a drunkard. Only a year has flown, But into this loathsome creature The fair young boy has grown; The work was sure and rapid, I will paint him as he lies In death-like drunken slumber Under the wintry skies.

I will paint the form of the mother As she kneels at her darling's side, Her beautiful boy who was dearer Than all the world beside. I will paint the shape of a coffin, And label it one word, "LOST." I will paint all this, rum seller, I will paint it free of cost.

The sin and the shame and the sorrow, The crime and the want and the woe, That were born there in your rumshop No hand can paint, you know; But I will paint you a sign, rum seller, And many shall pause to view, That wonderful, swinging signboard So terribly, fearfully true.

Summary of the

New Election Laws.

The first of the election laws creates a state board of three members to be elected by the general assembly prior to April 1 this year, one of whom shall be elected for two years; another for four years; and another for six years. This board shall appoint the county boards. As amended, however, each member of the state board is allowed to appoint one member of the county board. That is, the appointment of the county boards is not made with the concurrence of the entire state board, but the members act separately and individually. This insures a republican member of the state board. Vacancies on a state board are to be filled by the remaining members, and, on failure to do so, by the secretary of state, comptroller and treasurer.

Another amendment requires the publication of the election officers in some newspaper thirty days before the election.

The county board merely amends the existing act of 1907 on that subject.

It provides, however, that the minority member of the county board shall name the election officers who represent the minority. Each party is allowed two election watchers at every voting place by another amendment.

Haywood and Fayette counties, where the negroes compose a large majority of the population, are exempted from the law allowing the minority member to absolutely name the minority election officers. In these two counties the officers of election must be appointed by the entire board as is the case under existing law.

Committee amendments to the act creating county election boards were adopted in substance as follows:

First—Giving each county commissioner the right to appoint one judge of elections; one clerk shall be appointed by the majority of the county board and the other by the minority; the officer shall be named by the entire county board. Haywood and Fayette counties shall be exempted, the entire board acting in those counties.

Second—All election officers shall be published in county newspapers.

Third—Each party shall name two election watchers, one to be named each by the county executive committees and the others by a majority of the local candidates.

Fourth—The minority party is defined as the party that polled the second largest number of votes in the preceding presidential election.

An important amendment to the primary election laws limits the assessments that may be made on the candidates. These assessments are limited as follows: County candidates or legislative candidates $10; senatorial and floratorial candidates, $20; congressional candidates, $50; for state officers, $250, and for U. S. senate, $500.

CATTLE QUARANTINE.

Changes in the Quarantine Lines in Tennessee of Interest to Whom it May Concern.

Nashville, Tenn., March 30.—New regulations regarding southern or Texas fever of cattle have been issued by the Secretary of Agriculture to take effect April 1, 1906.

Pickett and Shelby Counties, the remainders of Sequatchie, Franklin, Giles and White Counties, that part of Marion County north and west of the Tennessee River, the city of Jackson in Madison County and a small area lying east and northeast of that city are entirely released from quarantine, with the exception of a few individual farms and herds that have not yet eradicated the ticks.

Cattle from the above mentioned counties (excepting the specially quarantined herds) are given the open markets of the world on and after April 1.

The above privilege will mean a great stimulus to the stock raising industry. There are twenty-one counties wholly or partially in quarantine in Tennessee, tick eradication is being conducted in fourteen of those counties and great progress is expected this year.

The United States Department of Agriculture has issued a new map indicating the free and quarantined area with directions as to the handling of cattle from the respective areas.

The local office of the Bureau of Animal Industry will be glad to furnish maps and copies of the new regulations to public officials representing counties, cities, the press, railways and other transportation companies. Address all communications to Dr. J. A. Kiernan, Room 215 Federal Building, Nashville, Tennessee.

FROM THE BLIND PREACHER.

Editor News:

If you will allow me a little space in your paper I will write a few lines to let my friends and those who may feel an interest in my welfare know where I am. I am at Bro. Dugan's on the mountain and am having some good meetings. I came through Sequatchie and visited my old friends, the Griffith family, and found the home very lonely since Ephraim has gone to heaven. Was glad to find Bro. Griffith had decided to change his life and prepare to meet Ephraim and his many friends in Heaven. We greatly sympathize with them in their bereavement and pray God's blessings. Myself and brother Dugan will be at Sardis Sunday and hold an Easter service. Would like to hear from any of my old friends through the paper, especially from Eastland and Tracy City. I am preaching most every Sunday and would love to go to Tracy sometime this summer if the Lord will.
